The organization Community-based approach Programme on Gender-Based Violence

- * The programme is to implement advocacy that focus on helping community members (men & boys) change their attitude towards human rights, child rights, gender-based violence, involved fatherhood and positive parenting.
- * The majority of Men oppose human rights at any cost, they consider our government as bias to women and so-they state that human rights are for women, the truth is that men and women have equal human rights and both genders are to exercise the rights responsibly. The misuse of rights lead to violence that break most of the families
- * The programme aims to transform the abusive men to become the most loving men towards their partners/spouses, the initiative lead to end GBV through raising men who will stand to say “NO” to violence against women and children.
- * The really fathers must show true love to their families, their minors must learn good attitude and respect towards women and children from the transformed men.
This initiative involves boys because they are the future husbands.
- * Men’s health and body maintenance.

Goals to achieve with this approach 'Fighting Violence Against Women & Children':

- Men to change their attitude towards human rights, child rights, gender-based violence, involved fatherhood and positive parenting..
- Men committing themselves to fight violence of any form against women and children in the community.
